Key Logging

Summary

Key Logging is a tool that hackers will often utilize to steal people's information and passwords. Once the keylogger malware is installed on your device it will start logging all the words you type into your computer. Once the malware has analyzed your various interactions with your keyboard, the hacker will have access to everything you have typed into your device since installing the malware. This will likely give them access to your email, passwords, banking information, and private conversations.

How Do Keyloggers Get Installed?

Keyloggers are often installed by the hacker via fake websites, phishing links, fake downloads, or even USB drives with the keylogger on them. All of these are very common tricks that hackers will use to get you to install their malware.

What Do I About Keylogging?

If you haven't already been hacked, be sure to be cautious about what links or websites you visit and to have up-to-date security on your computer. If you have already been the victim of keylogging malware, be sure to use anti-malware software to cleanse your device and then change all your passwords and contact your bank if you see any suspicious transactions. Furthermore, you can always contact BCSI Investigations if you have been a victim of hackers or other cybercrimes. BCSI Investigations and our team of Cyber Forensics specialists are prepared to handle any of your cybercrime cases.

If you or anyone you know has been a victim of fraud, contact BCSI Investigations for a consultation with one of our seasoned private investigators or our in-house digital forensics specialists.
